Q.57 (EMP)(SPLIT A) I want you to imagine you are listening to a debate on the topic of the economy.

In one concluding statement, Speaker A says: Our country's highest priority should be growth that creates full employment and raises incomes at every level, not just at the top. That requires raising the minimum wage and public investment in things like transportation and education. Markets don't always produce the best outcomes, so we need to rein in corporate power that harms regular people, small businesses and our economy. Raising taxes for the top one percent is key to reducing inequality.

In the other concluding statement, Speaker B says: Our economy works best when government is smaller and entrepreneurs and small businesses play a bigger role. So our biggest priority should be cutting government spending, including out-of-control entitlement spending, and removing government regulation that does more harm than good. We should be simplifying the tax code so government doesn't pick winners and losers and cutting taxes permanently for all taxpayers and corporations to spur growth.

Considering these two statements, which person do you trust more to address the economy -- Speaker A or Speaker B?

Q.58 (EMP)(SPLIT B) I want you to imagine you are listening to a debate on the topic of the economy.

In one concluding statement, the Progressive Speaker says: Our country's highest priority should be growth that creates full employment and raises incomes at every level, not just at the top. That requires raising the minimum wage and public investment in things like transportation and education. Markets don't always produce the best outcomes, so we need to rein in corporate power that harms regular people, small businesses and our economy. Raising taxes for the top one percent is key to reducing inequality.

In the other concluding statement, the Conservative Speaker says: Our economy works best when government is smaller and entrepreneurs and small businesses play a bigger role. So our biggest priority should be cutting government spending, including out-of-control entitlement spending, and removing government regulation that does more harm than good. We should be simplifying the tax code so government doesn't pick winners and losers and cutting taxes permanently for all taxpayers and corporations to spur growth.
