Please tell me whether this statement would make you much more likely, somewhat more likely, a little more likely, no more likely, or less likely to support Barack Obama in this year's presidential election.

Washington has forgotten about the middle class but I'll change that by making the tax code fairer and creating quality middle class jobs again. My plan cuts taxes for one hundred fifty million middle class Americans and I'll end tax breaks for companies that send jobs overseas and give them to businesses that create jobs at home. I'll renegotiate trade deals to protect American workers from unfair trade practices. Instead of spending trillions in Iraq, I'll use that money to rebuild our schools and roads and invest in alternative energy so we can cut our oil use by 35 percent and create millions of quality jobs.

Please tell me whether this statement would make you much more likely, somewhat more likely, a little more likely, no more likely, or less likely to support John McCain in this year's presidential election.

America faces serious challenges, and to overcome them we need to keep our country and our economy strong. To make our economy thrive again we need to cut taxes for middle class families and job-creating small businesses, but most importantly we need to get our budget under control by rooting out government waste and ending pork-barrel spending in Washington. We must preserve our standing in the world by building on our recent success and defeating Islamic extremists in Iraq and finally ending our dependence on foreign oil so we can stop sending money to countries that are friendly to terrorists.
